Correction: Earlier we reported that the Spring Feeder Cattle Sale would be on April 8. The sale has been delayed a week till April 15.

* * *

We're interested in receiving reports of fescue poisoning that may affect cattle. Frequently the loss is noted from now until spring with cattle that are feeding on fescue grass or hay. There is a mold fungus that grows on fescue that produces a toxic substance. It is this substance that is believed to be the cause of fescue poisoning.

Some workers believe that the fescue is a strain of the same organism that causes sickness when animals eat moldy corn.

In 1969 Virginia led the nation in the incidence of rabies. There were three groups of animals, wild animals, cattle, and cats led the list of infected animals.

Just recently an Illinois Company launched a new anti-rabies program that will require rabies vaccination for cats.

Vaccination of your cats could be one of the most important things that you'll do this year.

A study of cultural practices in the fire - cured tobacco conducted from 1957-64 in Tennessee may be applicable to Appomattox conditions.

1. An increase in the number of harvested leaves per plant increased the average weight of the leaves, increased the acre yield, and increased the acre value.

2. Increasing the topping height tended to increase the relative amount of "thin leaf" with a reduction in the other leaf groups.

3. An increase in plant population increased the weight of leaf per plant, increased the acre yield, and increased the acre value.

4. Increasing the plant population tended to increase the amount of thin leaf more than the amount of the other leaf groups.

5. The price per 100 pounds was greatly affected by changes in the number of leaves per plant or number of plants per acre.

6. The yield and acre value were higher for 2 of 3 years for tobacco grown on bottom lands than on upland soils.

7. Topping at early, medium or late bloom did not significantly affect yield, quality, value or grade of leaf produced.

8. Increasing the number of plant rows by planting tobacco in skip rows increased the acre yield and value. Most of the increase in weight was an increase in weight of the thin leaf group.

9. When weeds were controlled, neither frequency nor depth of cultivation had a significant effect on quality, but deep cultivation reduced yield and the proportion of heavy leaf.

Fertilize & Watch It Grow

Some cattlemen "put - up" hay, others just fertilize and watch it grow, Fertilize and watch it grow is what John Alvis of the Stonewall Community did this past summer.

Last week John showed a 50 acre field of tall fescue to a group of visitors. He explained that the field was grazed down pretty close last spring. In July - 50 pounds of liquid nitrogen was applied and the cattle were taken off. This is a procedure called "stockpiling". Cattle will be turned in about February 1, and hopefully this will take them to grass time.

On another part of the farm John showed his visitors a small acreage that was hayed last spring and then treated with 50 pounds of nitrogen. A portion of the herd had been released on this fescue.

John is quite proud of his tall fescue, Its done a good job for him. Last spring he experienced fescue poisoning for the first time. This may have been an omnious warning that cattlemen may be inviting trouble if only one kind of grass is utilized.

John is quick to point out that he and John Harrison were the first to seed tall fescue for hay and pasture in Appomattox County. So being an innovator is nothing new for him when it comes to grass production.

Nitrogen levels may vary from 40 to 75 pounds per acre. If the nigrogen is applied in August there is less opportunity for loss and tall fescue is ready to grow when the nights begin turning cool. Heavy nitrogen fertilization will call for higher amounts of other plant foods, especially potash and lime. Some growers are using 6-700 pounds of 10-10-10 in August to meet these needs. Soil test should be made at least every two years to check PA level.

PEOPLE IN GRASS

Look at this knee-high grass in mid-winter. John Alvis, Stonewall Cattleman, shows Bob McClenny, Carlton Harris and John Goin how he's stock-piled tall fescue for winter grazing.

CATTLE

Contented cattle graze tall fescue on the John Alvis farm. This fescue received an application last July. There's grass enough here for several weeks grazing.

LEONDA'S FANS

Local fans aren't sure about the score, but they are sure of one thing – basketball player Leonda Hudson, '70 graduate of ACHS and now at Roanoke College has quite a following of autograph seekers.

It was half-time at the Roanoke - Ferrum game Friday night, and Leonda reports that she was asked for her autograph. She thought they were kidding, but as it turned out, she signed her name to baseballs, programs, anything they had. Game score – about 82 to 24.
